Stinova offering free Digital Signage at BETT 2011

Landsberg, January 08, 2011 – Stinova, a leading software manufacturer of Digital Signage solutions will be showing off their latest solutions for the education market segment at BETT in London, Olympia from 12th to 15th of January at stand N65 (gallery level).

This year's highlights will include:

- 3D Signage with support for auto-stereoscopic technology that does not require any special glasses to enjoy the 3D experience of video content
- S-CUBE professional TV Streaming Gateway appliance that allows the easy and highly cost efficient integration of TV streaming into Digital Signage displays from sources such as Satellite TV (DVB-S), Terrestrial Digital TV (DVB-T) or any analogue video sources from cameras or DVD players
- Support for automatically distributed and scheduled play-out of native Power Point presentations enriched with overlays such as notifications or RSS Feeds
- Free Digital Signage SaaS account with extended WEB storage space for getting started without any major investment

Stinova's software solutions are developed for intuitive operation via WEB browser based interface for stand-alone or networked environments. The software supports multi-zoned and touch interactivity applications, as well as combination of local stored content together with live media information such as RSS feeds or video streams. And best of all, it can be used on literally any PC-based hardware platform unlike other solutions that are bound to a particular hardware.

"After last year's success at BETT show we are excited to demonstrate our latest developments this year at this great event for the educational market segment", says Franz Hintermayr, CEO of Stinova Ltd. "All visitors who shows interest in our Digital Signage solutions will get during the exhibition a free 12 months access to our DMS SaaS portal with extended storage space. This allows customers to start using Digital Signage without any major investment".
